

Bonnie Meltzer
Found Object Jewelry

Bonnie Meltzer's mixed-media constructions are made of the unlikely combination of recycled found objects for example, crocheted wire, digital photographs and painted wood.

As an avid vegetable gardener, the Maryhill Museum farm project was a perfect vehicle for her sculptural social commentary. In this visual lecture you will be able to follow her creative process as a participant in the project.

Her artworks have been exhibited nationally and are in many private and public collections, including the National Science Foundation and the University of Washington School of Business.

She has lectured at schools and conferences on many art topics including art from recycled and computer art.

She has an MFA from the University of Washington. You can see more about Bonnie Meltzer at www.bonniemeltzer.com
